Further figures prepared by the bureau of statistics show that the share which customs duties have borne in producing the revenues of the country have varied with varying conditions principally depending on the changes from time to time in internal revenue laws.

"It must not be supposed, howver," says the report, "that because a dozen articles or groups ofarticles pay three-fourths of the tariff duties collected that the making of a tariff and the determination of rates of duty and the amount of revenue likely to result therefrom is by any means a simple matter. The rates of duties are not aplied merely to group articles as a whole, but apply at different rates and in different rates and in different terms to various grades and qualities of rticles forming each group, and in many cases to the various grades of material bearing a single name.
